Bartleby, el escribiente (Spanish Edition) Herman Melville

Narra la historia de Bartleby, el escribiente, contada a través de un abogado de nombre desconocido que tiene su oficina en Wall Street, Nueva York y que, según sus propias palabras, «en la tranquilidad de un cómodo retiro, trabaja cómodamente con los títulos de propiedad de los hombres ricos, con hipotecas y obligaciones». Tiene tres empleados, apodados Turkey («Pavo»), Nippers («Pinzas») y Ginger Nut («Bizcocho de jengibre»). Turkey y Nippers son copistas, o escribientes; Ginger Nut, de apenas doce años, es el chico de los recados. Como los dos escribientes no son suficientes para hacer el trabajo de la oficina, el narrador pone un anuncio para contratar un nuevo empleado. Bartleby se presenta y es contratado de inmediato. Su figura es descrita como «pálidamente pulcra, lamentablemente respetable, incurablemente solitaria». El narrador asigna a Bartleby un lugar junto a la ventana. Al principio, Bartleby se muestra como un empleado ejemplar. Sin embargo, cuando el narrador le pide que examine con él un documento, Bartleby contesta: «Preferiría no hacerlo» (I would prefer not to, en el original) y no lleva a cabo la solicitud. A partir de entonces, a cada nuevo requerimiento de su patrón, contesta únicamente esta frase, aunque continúa trabajando en sus tareas habituales con la misma eficiencia. El narrador descubre que Bartleby no abandona nunca la oficina y que parece que se ha quedado a vivir allí. Al día siguiente, le hace algunas preguntas, pero Bartleby responde siempre con la misma frase. Poco después, Bartleby decide no escribir más, por lo que es despedido. Pero se niega a irse de la oficina.<sup>6</sup> Incapaz de expulsarlo por la fuerza, el narrador decide trasladar sus oficinas. Bartleby permanece en el lugar, y los nuevos inquilinos se quejan al narrador de su presencia. El narrador intenta convencerlo de que se vaya, pero no lo consigue. Bartleby es finalmente detenido por vagabundo y encerrado en la cárcel. Allí, poco después de la última visita que le hace el narrador, se deja morir de hambre. En un breve epílogo, el narrador comenta que el extraño comportamiento de Bartleby puede deberse a su antiguo trabajo en la oficina de cartas muertas (las no reclamadas), en Washington D. C
