The countries now known under the names of Moldavia, Wa Uachia, Bessarabia, the Bucovina, the Banat, and Transylvania, formed in ancient times the country of the Dacians, a warlike and savage people, who came from Jasebus and Margiens on the banks of the Oxus. They were first called Derbies, or Daes, and they spoke the same language as the Oetae, who inhabited the country at the mouth of the Danube. Their God was called Zamolxis: he is said to have been a disciple of Pythagoras, and to have strayed into their country, where he established a religion based on the system of his great master. After his death he was honoured as the chief of their divinities.
