Why do we care so much about cuisine, or cooking, or food for that matter?

Isn't it enough just to eat until you're full and move on?

Does every meal need to be savored to have value, to have benefit?

Food is more than just a part of our lives that we must pass by like a speed bump on the highway. Food and dining are a celebration of our abilities to surround the necessities of life with purpose, with art, and with brilliance. Life is more colorful with good food. Quiet moments between close friends are made more incredible and intimate by just the right culinary touches.

No two meals are every exactly the same, no matter how we try, there is always something element of chance and fate in every pan, oven, furnace and bowl.

Not only are family and friends brought together to share and enjoy each others' company, but the way these moments occur are nuanced greatly by the type and presentation of our meals. Much has been said of the ceremony and ritual of food and it's preparation, but we want to focus this book on the basics.

What follows is the list to end all lists. These are the Top 100 Cookbooks from all across the web, all across the globe, even. You would be wise to have at least 10 - 15 of these books on call at any moment (especially the coming holidays) for they are priceless in their utility.

Let's begin our "Bucket List" for Cookbooks (These are purposely not arranged in our ranking order). The following books could be ranked anywhere between 1 and 100!

So sit back, let's take a look at some incredible titles from all over – Cuisine, holiday dishes, food theory, chef thoughts, Vegetarians, food energy, beginner's and advanced cooking guides . . . it's all here.

Remember, history is written by the winners. There are lots of dishes and recipes that go untold . . . until now. Our adventures begin, here.

So lets learn some new things, meet some new people, go on amazing journeys to places we can only imagine as we go from page to page in wonder, unsure of how things will end, but knowing all along that it will be delicious!
