Not illustrated. 1873 Excerpt: ... presence of Abbot Sigienus n and of other seniors.?8 Another time, likewise, the saint being in the Island of Hy, he called one of the monks to him, and related an incident, which should soon occur. This touchingly illustrates affection for his native place, and its associations." Columba thus instructed his brother: "The third day next ensuing, you shall go to the west part of this Isle, and expect the coming of a certain crane,80 from the north part of Ireland. Being driven by the force of blustering winds through the spacious regions of air, all weary and turmoiled this crane shall arrive there after the ninth hour, and having all her forces consumed, she shall fall down on the shore before you. Do not forget to take her up mercifully, and bring her to the next house, where you shall treat her indulgently, and feed her carefully for three days. During this time, her strength shall be repaired, and being unwilling to sojourn with us any longer, she shall return back to her lovely country Scotia,8' where she was born. My true motive, for commend Oilioill Olum, who was slnin in battle about the year of Christ 240. His son Tadhg defeated the Ultonians, in the battle of Crinna. He received in consideration of his services a grant of that pari of Hregia extending from Glasneranear Druim Inesclann, now Drumiskin, on the north, to Cnoc Maoildoid, by the River Liffey, on the south. His descendants were called from his father the Cianachta, and this territory, being occupied by them, was called Cpioca ceo CmnaccA, or "cantred of Oannclit." 74 That is the portion of Ard Cianachta, lying between the Ailbine and Ath-cliath, afterwards known as Fmgall. This shows that Ard Cianachta extended southwards to the Liffey. 75 The territory spoken of in th...
